

While generally content with maintaining its core business and its relatively small size, McKay admits that he would like to see the company's newer, luxury armored car division become "more a part of the Jamaican culture. That's an area of the company we'd like to see utilized more. A lot of people, who used to be using them, are not using them. So that's something we'd like to develop," he says. Currently, the company maintains a small fleet of Ford Explorer, Mercedes Benz, and BMW armored vehicles.

By the way, McKay says that they never did solve the riddle of the ranger's murder, nor did they ever locate his body. The only positive outcome of that incident was the merging of his and his father's companies to create McKay Security & Investigative Services Ltd., today, one of Jamaica's top security firms.
