

mary contractor for the market, Cavalier Construction, and all the various subcontractors.” A reward for the performance on the market was the government contract for construction of the critical care block at the Princess Margaret Hospital.

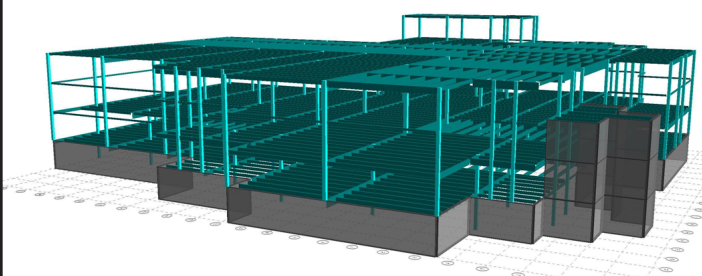

According to Chief Financial Officer Steven B. D’Alewyn, the company’s workforce stands near 40 full-time employees, alongside a roster of field laborers who come and go with projects – like health/safety officers, engineers and property surveyors – and are part of an extensive network of available workers.

As larger projects are awarded, he said, project managers and superintendents are hired on, too.

Operations are housed in a single Nassau facility, though the geographic footprint for services has stretched as far as Turks and Caicos – about 420 miles to the southeast – and consideration was given to an ultimately abandoned project in St. Kitts, which lies another 600 miles away from Cavalier’s home.

“We do look at further afield,” D’Alewyn said. “We don’t necessarily restrict ourselves to the islands, but, obviously, logistically it’s a different proposition mobilizing in another country.”
