

Lisas gas belt region. The Jusamco Pavers business built the runway at the country's Piarco International Airport and oversaw construction of the $19.7 million D'Abadie Bridge that opened in 2014.

Each company has its own office and they're operated independently while doing to day-to-day business, though Sammy is listed as the sole proprietor of the entire operation as a whole. Murphy said revenue among the three is split relatively equally, due in large part to the fact that the companies are able to subcontract to one another to handle their respective projects.

"There are two or three competitors that are probably close to being the same size as us," he said.

"But they don't give the same in-depth, across-the-board offerings that we do, because we can support it. We have the major players and the major clients coming in. We don't do a lot of advertising other than what you see on the island from our trucks and our equipment."
