

Since its inception, the Water Authority of the Cayman Islands has come a long way in fulfilling its mission. "In the last 30 years, we achieved a lot," says Deputy Director, van Zanten. "We went from a small, government department with half a dozen people, to an organization of more than 120 employees that is self-sufficient, provides good quality water to the majority of the population, provides wastewater collection and treatment services, and protects the water resources of the island for future generations."
